

Vita – Extraordinary Professor Peet Strydom

Prof Peet Strydom is currently retired but still serves as an extraordinary Professor in the School of Economics at North-West University's Potchefstroom campus. Prof Peet received his PhD at the Free University of Amsterdam and during the course of his career he lectured at the University of South Africa and the former RAU. He has been a visiting professor at the University of the Witwatersrand as well as the universities of Groningen and Paris. He also spent some time in the private sector as the senior economist of Central Merchant Bank and the head of strategic research at Sankorp. Over the years Prof Peet has played a key role in the Economic Society of South Africa and he hosts the annual Ruiterbosch Colloquium. He has published a range of academic journal articles and contributions to books. He also publishes invitation op-ed pieces on the web site of First National Bank.

The School of Economics enjoys having access to his experience and expertise.
